Within the next year, Mr. Furth and others said, it is expected that the machine, the Tokamak Fusion Test Reactor, will achieve the combination of high temperature, fuel density and confinement time needed for the generation of more energy than required to produce the reaction, or "break-even," but without actually producing the designed energy.

Fusion power, long a dream of scientists, could free the world of the threat of energy shortages because fusion plants could draw their fuel from seawater, a virtually

In addition, fusion reactors would produce innocuous helium rather than the many long-lived ra-dioactive products of present pow-

All nuclear plants today are fis-sion plants, which work by splitting atoms of uranium. As the atoms split, they release enormous amounts of heat, which is then used to generate electricity. But the fission process also generates danger-ous radioactive by-products, and uranium is an expensive and limited resource. In the fusion process, heavy forms of bydrogen — deuterium and tritium — are compressed in extreme heat until they fuse to form helium, a process that also releases prodigious amounts of energy.

The problems involving fusion stem primarily from two areas: how to get the fuel hot enough, and in what to hold it at that tempera-The success at Princeton demon-

PARIS — In a new gesture of irritation with West German and Japanese economic policies, the Reagan administration is resisting pressure for a secret meeting of finance ministers of the so-called Group of Five next month to discuss steps to halt the dollar's slide, according to European monetary officials.

(An announcement Friday that the chairman of the Federal Re-serve Board, Paul A.-Volcker, will visit Frankfurt next Monday started speculation on Frankfurt bond and currency markets that the visit would coincide with a Group of Five meeting, Reuters reported.

17 Killed in Beirut In Car-Bomb Blast

By Nora Boustany Washington Post Service BEIRUT — A car bomb ravaged a narrow street crammed with motorists and shoppers in mainly Moslem West Beirut on Friday, killing 17 persons and wounding at least 50 others.

The explosion, the second major one in West Beirut in as many weeks, was set off between two buildings housing offices for the Lebanese Communist Party and the Shiite Amal movement. It set fire to two buildings.

Red Cross workers dragged out scorched car occupants from a mass of tangled metal, as civil defense teams, Syrian soldiers and Lebanese police removed debris.

The crowd wailed when the body of a baby, blackened and stiff, was laid on a stretcher with ontstretched arms and clenched fists. Several women and three children were among the dead.

Using loudspeakers, Lebanese security men urged onlookers to clear off the street and head to the American University of Beirut and area hospitals to donate blood.

The explosion, the sixth in Beirut in 12 days, devastated rows of shops on both sides of Afif Tibi Street, previously a main location for Palestine Liberation Organization offices and nerve center of the PLO propaganda machine.

The explosive charge, estimated at 110 pounds (50 kilograms) of TNT and wired to 82mm mortars. was planted in a car parked underneath a seven-story building. The explosion set fire to two buildings and shattered glass all along the street facing the Arab university and leading to a packed mosque.

The explosion Friday coincided with a drive by the Sunni Moslem prime minister, Rashid Karami, to summon his ministers after months of political deadlock and suspended cabinet meetings.

Within two hours of the bombing Friday, shelling erupted across the Green Line separating the Mos-lem and Christian sectors of Beirut. Local radio stations reported that 14 persons were wounded in the shelling.

The cycle of violence brought on by booby-trapped cars and small blasts around the capital has marred a climate of relative stability after a month-old Syrian deployment alongside Lebanese soldiers and police in the western half of the capital.

UN Action on New Caledonia Urged

SUVA, Fiji (Combined Dispatches) — The 13 nations of the South Pacific Forum voted Friday to ask the United Nations to look into the question of independence for French New Caledonia, according to Peter Kemitorea, prime minister of the Solomon Islands.

Mr. Kemitorea said the decision to seek the reinsertion of New Caledonia on the UN List of Colonized Territories was unanimous. South Africa France withdrew New Caledonia from the list in 1947 and has main-WASHINGTON - The White

In Paris, officials at the South Pacific Affairs Ministry expressed indignation. These after all are nations with which we have friendly ties and some of their leaders have been on recent visits to France," one said. "We did not expect this." France has called for a referendum on selfdetermination next year, but forum members felt the question of independence should be brought up at the UN before then. (AP, Reuters)

Afghanistan-Pakistan Talks Suspended

GENEVA (NYT) — Indirect negotiations between Afghanistan and Pakistan on the Afghan war were suspended Friday with the foreign minister of Pakistan saying the two sides remained far from agreement on an issue crucial to a settlement.

In a statement issued in Geneva, Sahabzada Yaqub Kahn, the foreign minister of Pakistan, said there had been substantive talks on implementing a settlement and the withdrawal of about 120,000 Soviet troops occupying Afghanistan since December 1979. But an acceptable 822 frame for the Soviet withdrawal remained the principal outstanding issue, of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in 1982 after a long session of the Senate Finance Committee, Mr. Dole asserted that lobbyists had caused the scuff marks "with their Guccis." There are many variations on the phrase. An exceptionally heavy lobbyist presence has been described as "wall-to-wall Guocis." Or, to describe a lobbyist making an unreasooable re-quest: "He doesn't have a Gucci to stand on," and the lobbyists' gathering place is sometimes described as Gucci Gulch.

The Backyard Pool: No Longer Splashy

The backyard pool has taken the place of the family room in warm weather and become "a kind of summertime hearth" for a lot of suburban Americans, says John Stilgoe, a professor of visual and environmental studies at Harvard University.

There are now four and a half million residential pools in the United States, a million more than in 1975, according to The New York Times, But, says The Times, the larger number means a certain decline in the value of a pool as a status symbol.

In the words of one resident of Southampton, New York, "It's just there. It's rather like having a food processor."

Plan to Fight Drugs in School Expected Soon From Reagan

By Bernard Weinraub

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The White House, facing intense Republican pressure to seize the narcotics issue, intends to propose a $100-million program in a few days aimed at combating the use of drugs in schools, according to administration officials.

The officials said Thursday that Republican legislators had told the White House that unless the ad-ministration drew up specific legislation quickly, Republicans io Congress would feel compelled to endorse a $2-billion to $3-billion anti-drug bill that is being pressed by the Democratic leadership.

The officials said intense Republican political pressure to keep Democratic politicians from capi-talizing on the drug issue was a factor in overcoming President Ronald Reagan's resistance to committing large amounts of money to drug programs. Mr. Reagan in recent years has imited the amount of U.S. funds for narcotics programs. But administration officials said that several weeks ago he enthusiastically supported a national anti-narcotics campaign. Now they say action is bogged down because of internal

White House aides were urging that a legislative effort be unveiled before Congress leaves for a recess Aug. 15 and Mr. Reagan leaves for his summer vacation Aug. 16.

the plan were not given.
Officials said the White House chief of staff, Mr. Regan, and his aides, as well as Education Secretary William J. Bennett, were pressing for a series of quick, detailed announcements about the program to calm Republican legislators. This would also parry potential criticisms that the administration was seeking to tackle it largely through public relations.

Dr. Turner, who also advises Nancy Reagan on her anti-drug efforts, and Attorney General Edwin Meese 3d are, in the words of a key official, "more doubtful and more cantious" about announcing specific anti-narcotics efforts. They want a single package disclosed in the antumn.

Administration officials said that Dr. Turner had opposed sig-nificant increases of U.S. spending on drug programs and that White House aides were reluctant to criticize him because of his ties to Mrs.

Officials said that the situation was further complicated because Dr. Turner and Mr. Meese, who have overseen most of the administration's anti-oarcotics efforts. viewed the new measures as a veiled criticism of their performance, although that was not Mr. Reagan's intent.

Senate Upholds Reagan On Nerve Gas Bombs

By Helen Dewar

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - The Senate has narrowly rejected a move to block production of a new genera-

As it continued work on the military spending authorization bill for next year, the Senate also reiterated its call for resumption of oegotiations on a comprehensive nuclear test-ban treaty. It urged President Ronald Reagan to submit treaties restricting underground nuclear tests for ratification.

It approved a nonbinding resolution on the test treaties offered by Senator Charles McC. Mathias, Republican of Maryland, and Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, by a vote of centerpiece of Mr. Reagan's plan to modernize the chemical weapons arsenal with "binary" bombs and shells, achieves its lethal punch by mixing two nontoxic chemicals that produce nerve gas after the bomb is dropped.

The go-shead for the Bigeye was the second defeat of the day for forces opposing a plan to spend $1.1 billion next year on nerve gas. Production of chemical weapons was suspended in 1969 by President Richard M. Nixon.

Earlier, the Senate voted, 57-43. against a move by Schator Mark O. Hatfield, Republican of Oregon, to challenge the administration's claim that it had met congressional demands for North Atlantic Treaty Organization approval before go-ing ahead with production of a 155limeter nerve-gas artillery shell.

The showdown came as the Senate moved toward approval of the military anthorization bill for next year and its leaders attempted to negotiate an agreement for voting on two major issues: aid to the Nicaraguan rebels and sanctions against South Africa.

The Senate majority leader, Bob Dole, Republican of Kansas, and the minority leader, Robert C. Byrd, Democrat of West Virginia, were reportedly near agreement on a plan that would assure votes on both issues before Congress starts its recess Aug. 15.

WASHINGTON - It started in Chicago in March, with handbills being passed out in suburban shopping malls. Word spread through Illinois, Missouri and Indiana. Now it has hit the East Coast. For $31, one friend tells another, you can buy a certificate good for two round-trip air fares to Hawaii. ip air larges to mawaii. The $31 certificate from World Travel Vacation Brokers Inc. of Chicago entitles the holder to two airline tickets if he or she purchases lodging for seven nights at selected hotels and at prices set by the travel agency. The weekly rates for those hotels range from $800 to $1,800 for a couple, and the rates at the low end of the scale rarely are available. The rates are subject to change without notice and do not reflect the hotels' actual rates, according to the certificates.

"It's gimmick advertising that's very effective," said Robert Bush, an attorney for World Travel. "Minnesota went crazy. The same thing is happening now in New York and Washington. Two million dollars worth of the certificates have been sold. according to the Illinois attorney general's office, which investigated World Travel but found that the company was selling exactly what it

Mr. Bush said that the hotel prices might be "somewhat inflated" but "if you compare the total package price, it's a good deal, too." Some travel experts disagree with that assessment, citing packages for air fare and hotels available for as little as $569 a person from several airlines and travel agencies.

In Hawaii, tourism officials are "a little nervous" over the $31 deal according to Gene Coxter of the Hawaii Visitors Bureau, "We want people to get value for their vacation," he said.

Comecon Warms Up to Common Market

By Steven J. Dryden

BKUSSELS — Recent contact between the European Community and Comecon, the Soviet bloc's economic organization, may lead to the first formal Soviet-bloc recognition of the Common Market since its founding in 1957, EC officials say.

Responding to initiatives from Comecon, the European Community proposed last month that officials from the two groups meet in Geneva in September to resume talks broken off six years ago amid a deterioration of East-West relations. The moves by Comecon toward a new dialogue, which involve pri-marily the Soviet Union and the six East European members of the organization - Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland and Romania — appear to form part of Mikhail S. The initiatives "fit it in well with the Gorbachev approach - flexible and pragmatic, but without any basic change in Soviet foreign po-licy," said an official of the EC Executive Commission, which will represent the European Communito achieve, given what many experts see as Soviet efforts to strengthen political discipline and to discourage elaborate economic relations between East Europe and the West. "Comecon is dominated by the Soviet Union, which is doing its best to strengthen internal ties," said an aide to the EC external affairs commissioner, Willy de Clercq. "This worries us." In its early years, when Cold War tensions were running high, the European Community was scorned by the Soviet Union as an organiza-tion for "imperialist integration in Western Europe." Comecon members remain among the handful of nations that have not established diplomatic relations with the EC. Over the years, however, Moscow's stance softened, especially during détente in the early 1970s. Since then, the fortunes of the diplomatic maneuverings between the two sides have continued to from the new relationship, the East follow the overall pattern of East-European nations are apparently West relations, although European Community officials believe progress has been made in changing

But in response to Comecon's initiatives, the EC made it clear that it did not want to start talks again until it received assurances that any EC-Comecon agreement would not limit relations with individual members. In April, the EC received an en-new era in which governments abjure nomic efficiency and jobs. protection and avoid a subsidy war.

It was, in a sense, a Pyrrhic victory: the Reagan administration had granted the protectionist lobbies much of what they sought in advance of the vote. Only five days before the vote, with considerable help from Washington, signatory countries renewed the Multi-Fiber Arrangement, which for a quarter of a century has carved up trade in textiles and clothing to the disadvantage of the poorer nations.

The fiber accord, allegedly a temporary pact to enable the richer nations to put their ailing industries in order, shows little sign of being phased out. Its scope has even been broadened. You need a microscope, and much imagination, to detect any success it has had in preserving textile jobs in the developed world. And by raising prices to consumers, it reduces activithe growth of income in, for example, Asia - income that would have been spent partly on goods from the richer nations. And by repelling imports from the less developed countries, it ensures that wages in those countries stay low.

One frightening aspect of such pacts is that, eventually, even some Third World producers come to love them. The fiber accord, for example, gives their managers an excuse for laziness. Although their sales to the developed world are restricted, some producers enjoy quite high quotas. They thus need fear no competition

> Textiles and clothing are but one example, though a large one, of the move from free trade to managed trade. Parallel conditions prevail in the markets for steel, ships and automobiles - not to speak of farm products where the costly battle to subsidize food exports is heating up fast. Europe's obdurate defense of its totally nonmarket agricultural policy is matched by Japan's, and America plays the game with power. Mr. Reagan's decision to subsidize wheat sales to Russia, characterized by his own secretary of state as ridiculous, is only the icing on a cake whose recipe is based on rejection of the principle of comparative advantage.

The industrialized world has slid back ominously from the free trade on which its postwar prosperity was based. Shortsighted acts by governments reduce their ty in other, more viable, sectors, ft limits lofty sentiments to hypocrisy. Hopefully, new multilateral negotiations will begin next year to reduce trade barriers and export subsidies. The starting point is hardly encouraging. Governments must forget their rhetoric and concentrate on the facts - which is where the concept of comparative advantage comes in again. Why should we go on making things people do not want to buy? The question was put, most recently, not by the apostles of the market economy but by Mikhail Gorbachev. The apostles need to think about it hard.

Deadline for Peru

Peru presents an interesting question: How long can a small country with an unbalanced economy prosper without access to foreign credit? Not much longer, most economists would guess, Peruvians are more optimistic. The country is enjoying a modest boom, inflation is down, and President Alan García Pérez, now beginning his second year in office, remains extremely popular. Much of that popularity is generated by his pledge to limit payments on the country's foreign debt to 10 percent of the country's export earnings.

But the deadline for a substantial payment to the International Monetary Fund is Ang. 15, and a default would sharply increase Peru's financial isolation. It is a painful choice for the IMF as well. There is a certain reluctance to make matters worse for a country already very poor and in trouble. But the impulse to let Peru somehow fudge its way past the Aug. 15 deadline is restrained by the certainty that, if one country gets away with a highly visible default, the internal pressures to set similar its will rise in ot important debtor countries.

duced a respectable surge of growth. He not only limited debt service, he froze prices, froze the exchange rate, subsidized some consumer goods and started some temporary employment projects as well. But a price freeze erodes over time, and the fixed exchange rate, now too high, has severely hurt the export industries. That damage ha been compounded by the low prices of copper and oil, Peru's major exports. The idea seems to be to get along with minimal imports. But for an underdeveloped economy based on primary commodities, autarky is a harsh way to live, let alone to grow.

Mr. Garcia has done many things that are exactly right. He has canceled, for example, most of the orders for Mirage aircraft from France. Peru needs many things, but jet fighters are not among them. Its security requirements are internal as it struggles with the Shining Path, that strange and intractable guernilla movement exploiting the poverty of the country. But the economy is now crucial, and Pera is getting along comparatively well this summer for reasons that seem unlikely to carry it through Mr. Garcia's second year. It is the right moment for a shift to another When Mr. Garcia took office, he imposed policy. But there is no sign that the Garcia a highly populist program, which has progovernment has any such thing in mind.

Helms and the CIA

Hours after the Central Intelligence Agency gave a briefing on Chile to a member of the staff of Senator Jesse Helms, Chile's military rulers learned that U.S. intelligence had confidential information about the violent death last month of an American teen-ager during a demonstration in Santiago. So, at least, runs the complaint of the State Department.

That does not necessarily mean that Senator Helms leaks national security information to foreign governments. The State Department, engaged in a running feud with the North Carolina senator, is likely to see anything he does in the worst light. But even in the best light, these are serious charges. The Senate Intelligence Committee has asked for a Justice Department investigation and the Federal Bureau of Investigation is on the case.

Mr. Helms, chairman of a Latin America subcommittee, charges that he is the victim of a sneak attack by Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams. "They're trying to silence me," he protested the other day.

Mr. Abrams denies accusing Mr. Helms or any staff member. He says his interest is in plugging an obvious intelligence leak. The Intelligence Committee's Republican chairman, David Durenberger, and its Democratic vice chairman, Patrick Leahy, agree that the evident security breach warrants investigation.

Sanctions: The Time Is Now

The Commonwealth measures appear to strike the proper balance between carrot and stick; they will pinch the South African economy but not choke it. They will leave the door open to wider measures should the government not budge, and they can be lifted easily if it does. The sanctions will demonstrate the Commonwealth's outrage at Pretoria's racist regime. Most important, they will show the moderate black leaders that the West is on their side.

The Commonwealth's sanctions may have still another positive effect: They may drag President Reagan and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain into accepting sanctions themselves. The clock in South Africa is ticking, and the time for U.S. sanctions has arrived.

For a Third Eye and Ear on Nuclear Arms

I XTAPA, Mexico — The idea is spreading that nuclear arms control is everybody's business. not just the nuclear powers', because everybody would be affected by nuclear war. The atom has no respect for neutral.

That is the theme behind the meeting here of the heads of six governments from five continents. They are moving on from pious proclamations to an acceptance of responsibilities. The search for practical and concrete measures has led to a focus on observation and verification.

They cannot force the United States and the Soviet Union to make agreements, but they can make it harder to refuse by putting themselves in a position to bear witness if there is cheating. The first step has been announced: plans for a network of monitoring stations to support a nuclear test ban. The proposal calls for Soviet and American participation if possible, but if not, the countries say they will do it on their own.

Mexico, Argentina, Sweden, Greece, India and Tanzania are involved at this stage, offering a favorable geographical spread. But there are more ambitious ideas that could lead to a truly new global peace alert system. That would be to establish an international scientific research and reporting center with a seismic ear to the ground and a surveillance eye in the sky.

The recent publication of a Swedish photograph showing new activity at the Soviet Semipalatinsk test site gave a glimpse of what such a system could mean. Obviously the Russians know what they are doing, and if a commercial satellite can spy on them. American military intelligence has recorded even more. But it took the Swedes to tell the world.

. A full system could provide constant, complete public warnings of major military activity around the world, independent of both Soviet and American decisions to keep secrets or to announce what they learn. The six states represented here do not have the resources to do it alone, but they can take the initiative to bring in competent and adequate help.

Sadly, the United Nations is not the right place to go; it is too hamstrung by its quarrels and bureaucratic booby traps. But there are a dozen or more countries with advanced scientific and engineering capacities whose contributions could make the system work, and there are signs that several are already willing.

The beauty of the plan is that it can be totally apolitical, like weather reporting, without reference to national defense policies, fears and rival-ries. If it is established on a strictly technical basis, committed to full and immediate reporting, it would quickly develop an immense international authority that, in turn, could do a lot to ease tensions based on mistrust.

The system could work as a much more sophisticated version of Eisenhower's unrealized "open skies" proposal, with the advantage that it would not depend on Soviet-American cooperation.

As John Kenneth Galbraith points out, what he calls the "nuclear theologians" have a monopoly of information that permits them to exclude practically everybody else from weighing in on nuclear arms issues, though it does not exclude everybody else from exposure to the nuclear threat. They distort the debate and obscure the meaning of decisions.

The result is the mindless growth of nuclear arsenals, as though they produced a life of their own by coupling in mutual fear. Dr. Jerome Wiesner, President Kennedy's science adviser, recalled as he listened to the contemporary roster of the nuclear family that in 1961, he and Robert McNamara, then the defense secretary, argued whether America would have all it could possibly need if it built 200 or 1,000 missiles. Those seem halcyon days now.

Dr. Wiesner has submitted a paper to the Irispa conferees for an International Arms Verification and Study Center, the heart of the third eye and ear plan, but with important provisions for training and research. "An effective way to build a common security system," he said, "is to substitute information for weapons."

This is quintessential good sense, since the nuclear powers insist that the purpose of their weapons is never to be used but to prevent others from being used. At last intelligence and technological advance are being turned on how to back away from the brink. Deterrence is better than war, but a way to diminish fears is better yet. The New York Times.

Casey's Crackdown: Toward an Unofficial Secrets Act

STORY CLISSPED

BY DEE POOPER

By Daniel Schorr

Washington — Britain has an Official Secrets Act, empowering the government to ban information on national security grounds. In the United States, the Reagan admin-istration in recent months appears to have laid the foundations for an Unofficial Secrets Act.

In Britain, a motorcycle courier delivers to news offices a "D-Notice" from the Defense Ministry, formulated after consultation with a committee of editors. The notice, itself secret, specifies the subject that must be kept under wraps. The Appeals Court in London recently barned the publication of allegations of Soviet penetration of the British Secret Service.

In recent months, American editors have come to know the more informal "C-Notice" - a telephone call from William J. Casey, director of Central Intelligence, warning of possible prosecution under existing espionage laws. These warnings have created a fog of uncertainty in many newspaper and broadcast offices.

Not all recipients of cautionary calls from Mr. Casey choose to disclose them. In the most recent publicized cases, he gave such warnings to Bob Woodward, an assistant managing editor of The Washington For and to Seymour M. Hersh, both authors of forthcoming books dealing with intelligence subjects. The CIA director, professing not to know the contents of these books, indicated that the warnings were directed not gories of information. The administration appears to be moving to expand the bridgehead that it won in May by successfully about the secrets of underwater eavesdropping, which Ronald W. Petton, a former employee of the National Security Agency, was convicted of selling to the Russians.

According to the executive editor,

Benjamin Bradler, Post editors tried various versions of their story on government officials and, receiving approval for none of them, finally yielded to the warning of Mr. Casey, plus a personal appeal from President Rea-gan. The Post suppressed the main substance of its story, Mr. Bradlee said, even though the editors were sure security was not involved. In the past, news organizations

But the Reagan administration is try-ing to establish that the press has not only a patriotic duty but a legal obligation to suppress information the government declares off limits. That is new, and it is alarming.

broad authority, under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, to obtain an injunction to ban an article dealing with nuclear weapons, even if written from unclassified sources. (The injunction was lifted when the article was published abroad.)

Last year the Espionage Act of 1947 was successfully applied, for the first time, to a press leak. Samuel L. Morison, a Navy intelligence analyst, was sentenced to two years in prison for providing satellite photos of a Soviet aircraft carrier to the British press may not survive a constitution-

A third structs, which Mr. Camp has dusted off and is now brandishing, is the Communications Intelligence Act of 1950. This dracomian law was written in the shadow of World War II concerns over revelations of broken enemy codes. Supreme Court Justice Byron R. White called attention to this statute in his opinion in the 1971 "Pentagon Papers" case, saying, "I would have no difficulty sustaining convictions under these sections."

The William Casey Post

In a case involving the Progressive magazine in 1979, a federal district court held that the government had communications Intelligence Act prescribes prison and fines for "whoever knowingly and willfully commu-nicates, furnishes ... or publishes" classified information dealing with communications intelligence "in any manner prejudicial to the safety or interest of the United States."

The American Civil Liberties Umon says that could be construed as applying to all the assets of any news organization that was found guilty under an espionage law. Mr. Stevens denies this was his intent.

Mr. Casey has created an aura of vague menace to the discussion of lligence subjects. He would like to go further. He told the Washington Journalism Review that he wants new legislation that would ban the "mis-use of classified information." Sanctimony Has No Place In Politics

By Edwin M. Yoder Jr.

WASHINGTON — Michigan's W absurdly early 1988 presiden-tial preliminaries did take one happy turn — for which, herewith, a sub-dued hallelujah. The polls showed voters dislike being mistaken for a church congregation. The news may be alarming for organized sanctimony, whose preem-nent tribune now is the Reverend Marion "Pat" Robertson. He is not the first candidate with messianic pretensions, but he carries the act exceptionally far. When he recruited several hundred born-again followers to stand as Republican precinct delegates in Michigan, he gushed: "What a victory for the kingdom!" (That's Politically, Mr. Robertson is flouting the spirit of the Constitution, which states: "No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office of public trust under the

John Kennedy told Protestant clergy: "I believe in a president whose views on religion are his own private affair, neither imposed on him by the nation nor imposed upon him as a condition of holding his office." If Pat Robertson believes his religious views are a "private affair," he representative will change his luck. President Resgan has contributed to the depoliticization of the atmosphere by casting a blanket of benign good feelings over the divisions that otherwise might generate grass-roots energy and activism. Even on issues that stir real passions, from South Africa sanctions to import restraints, Mr. Reagan's style is so low-keyed that he tends to drain the emotion from the question. He also tends to dilute the pressure for political or governmental action by announcing consensus goals without spelling out the policy choices, trade-offs and costs they may require.

environment" Mr. Reagan promises? But political choice begins only when you come down from the the-torical level to examine the options for action: interdiction of supplies, prosecution and incarceration of dealers, surveillance and testing of users. All of these have financial and social costs. The debate gets interesting just at the point Mr. Reagan drops it: Who is to do these things and who is to pay for them?

But it is more than the personality of one man. Most Americans appear to be giving themselves a respite from politics — and not just for this vacation season. They are dealing with things closer to home and to the heart than the choice of candidates or programs. Eventually, they may turn their minds to the midterm election. When they do, we may be surprised by their plans. The Washington Post,

Apartheid: Apartheid: Apartheid: Tade Bi To Fight It By William Safire

W ASHINGTON — The Big Lie being sold and swallowed in the debate over South Africa is this: If you are against sanctions, you are for apartheid.

Robert Mingabe, the Marxist who brought one-party black rule to Zimbabwe, said it again, denouncing Margaret Thatcher for choosing the path of supporting apartheid. A British Labor Party leader predicted that the U.S. Congress would soon force President Reagan to adopt sanctions, making Britain the only protector of apartheid in the world.

Effective demagognery, but a lie.

The equivalent receiving would be:

a bloody race war.
Prime Minister Thatcher and Mr.

Prime Minister I hatcher and Mr.
Reagan have spoken out against apartheid — "repugnant" is the favored adjective — but seem to be standing against a tide of public opinion that says, "Well, what are you going to do about it?"

They do not have a satisfying an swer to that. One reason is that the pace of dismantling apartheid has been too slow; the striking-down of miscegenation laws and the hated pass system shows real progress, but only whats the appetite for more drastic change that no brutality can beat down nor any censorship hide.

The other reason is that the "it" that so many people want something done about is not merely the end of apartheid. By "it," they mean real political equality: one person, one vote. That means majority rule, and nonwhites are the overwhelming ma-jority in South Africa. That means an wa end to white government as the Afrikaners have known it for three centuries; that means the same kind of black rule that exists elsewhere in Africa and most white South Africans would rather remain the oppressors than become the oppressed. No democrat can oppose the idea of majority rule, but no realist thinksthe outside world can bring it about now or soon. Forget about the impo-sation of black rule in this decade; it will not happen. Some of the whites with English ancestors would flee to Australia, but the Boers would stand and fight for their homeland.

So what are we going to do about it? First, split the "it": One "it" is a transfer of power, which if it is to come soon would have to come on the wings of Communist-backed revolu-tion. Many radicals want just that, and call on the United States to help by quartering South Africa, bringing its economy to its knees, spreading misery and hunger — which would invite increased violence, repression and opening. Mrs. Thatcher and Mr. Reagan are neither racist nor vesting, with requirements that new -. industry train and employ skilled in blacks; by strengthening labor :: unions and giving black consumers economic muscle for boycotts, the outside world can help bring about political power-sharing without revointion. That is the sort of thing now 21 derogated as "constructive engage-ment" by those impatient with the designated villains. Enough talk, they v. say, let's show 'em we can throw a my thunderbolt from the moral high ground. Sanctions now!

I happen to believe that sanctions can work, and that economic power should be applied to twist political arms. It upsets me when Robert Dole buys votes in Kansas by subsidizing Russian consumers with 50 million U.S. tax dollars. We should be putting the squeeze on repressive govern-ments of all ideologies.

given a part in "Ferris Bueller's Day Off." By a stroke of luck, my part was built up on the day of the shooting, and the director and editor left me in the final cot. I played a teacher asking a group of torpid students if they had ever heard of the Great Depression. When no one answered, I would say, "Anyone? Anyone?" in a mournful cadence.

Now the movie is playing on about 1,000 screens. It has brought in close to $60 million, and my life has changed, based upon no more than 150 seconds on the big screen.

Example: At a malt shop in Van

Ontrage by certain noted cinema directors and critics over the "colorization" of old black and white "masterpieces" is the reaction of narrow-minded sentimentalists with short memories, Most of what they call "most important creative works" were never conceived in anything but black and white. They were part of the vast quantity of "schlock" films, written by hack scenarists and turned out by the studios on a production line basis from the '30s to the '50s. Color was far too expensive to justify for an audience who still found cinema itself a novelty and demanded nothing lawyer read them. more than hlack and white.

Composers' Anniversaries

The anniversaries of three composers provide the dominant themes of this year's Musikfestwochen — Carl Maria von Weber (born 1786), Franz Liszz (died 1886) and the Swiss composer Othmar Schoeck (born 1886) and the Swiss composer Offmar Schoeck (born 1886) — with a concentration of their works in the concent programs, and exhibitions devoted to Lizzt and Schoeck. The Lucerne Festival Strings under Rudolf Baumgartner give an all-Schoeck concert Ang. 17, Dietrich Fischer-Dieskan's recital Aug. 22 includes songs by Schoeck and the festival's closing concert Sept. 10 has the West German Radio Orchestra and Chorus under Gerd Albrecht in a concert performance of the composer's opera "Massimilla Doni," with Edith Mathis in the principal role. The pianist Jorge Bolet gives an all-Listr recital Ang. 18, Listr's "Faust" and "Dante" symphonies are in the concert programs and an evening of his "melodramas" (spoken texts with musical accompaniment) will be given Aug. 25 by Gert Westphal and the pianist Michael Studer. Hans Werner Henze's 60th birthday will be marked with a concert Aug. 27 devoted to his music.

ZURICH

From Zurich to London

■ The Zurich artist Johann Heinrich Füssli, whose fiery political writings led him to exile in Berlin, Rome and London, finally believed in the principles of the French Revolution. He joined a party of other Revolutionary sympathizers, such as Thomas Paine and Mary Wollstonecraft, on a trip to Paois but retreated before the excesses of the Terror. No traces of the contemporary tragedy show up in his oils and drawings. What he depicts in a large collection at the Zunch Kunsthaus (until Aug. 17) are morbid, weirdly crotic or theatrical scenes from antiquity or the classics, from Dante, Shakespeare, the legends of

William Tell and the THE DESIGNATION OF THE PERSON Nibelungen, posed by muscular men and fragile women. "A Nightmare" won Füssli Lengt on the official sel fame and a post at Phase M. Mightier Pens' Revenge

'I can neither paint nor write'

by William H. Pritchard

HEN, in August 1929, the art critic Thomas Earp adversely criticized both D. H. Lawrence's introduction to a catalog of his paintings, and the paintings themselves, Lawrence wrote and published the fol-

> I heard a little chicken chirp: My name is Thomas, Thomas Earp! And I can neither paint nor write I only can set other people right. All people that can write or paint do tremble under my complaint. For I am a chicken, and I can chirp; and my name is Thomas, Thomas

How good a weapon is literature for settling scores with someone by making his person or art an object of ridicule? To what extent can we adequately account for a poem, story or novel by locating its origin in spiteful feeling, a determination on the author's part to celebrate — with humorous zest or steely-eyed contempt - the offenses of another?

Surely we have all felt the stirrings of such a retaliatory motive. After my first book was published in this country but not in England, I made bold to send a copy to an English critic interested in my subject Immediately I received back a neat postcard, graciously thanking me for the book and expressing anticipatory pleasure in sitting down to it. Three months later there appeared a fierce review in The Spectator in which the gracious critic took my work to task as a feeble specimen of academic incapacity — "timid," "donnish," "obtuse" were three of the adjectives applied to it. When I got through wincing and weeping (surely I was not obtuse, even if possibly donnish?) the thought of retaliation came to mind, some masterly reply loaded with irony and pity. But friends dissnaded me.

Good advice, yet of the sort not heeded by Alfred Tennyson when he encountered in Blackwood's Edin-burgh Magazine John Wilson's review of his 1830 volume of poems. Writing under the name Christopher North, Wilson set out in the most patronizing manner to demonstrate that "Alfred," though unden iably a poet, was ridiculously over-praised and would only save himself by hearkening to Christopher North's criticism. Tennyson hearkened only enough to produce these stanzas;

You did late review my lays, Crusty Christopher, You did mingle blame and praise, Rusty Christopher, When I learnt from whom it came, I forgave you all the blame, Musty Christopher; I could not forgive the praise, Fusty Christopher.

His friend Arthur Hallam pleaded with him not to include it in his next collection, but to no avail.

My candidate for the most brilliant piece of spitefulness in English poetry is Alexander Pope's portrait of Sporus in his "Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot." In real life Sporus was an effeminate and profligate courtier, Lord Hervey, who combined with Lady Mary Wort-ley Montague (another antagonist) in publishing at-tacks on Pope. In the poem Pope's friend Arbuthnot gives him worldly advice about how the whole affair is not worth wasting his time on: "Satire or Sense alas! can Sporus feel? / Who breaks a Butterfly upon a Wheel?" But Pope, in the grip of an artistic necessity more imperious than merely the need to repay an insult, brushes the advice aside: "Yet let me flap this Bug with gilded wings, / This painted Child of Dirt that stinks and stings;" and proceeds through 25 lines of brilliant invention to excoriate Sporus/Hervey as an "Amphibious Thing!," a combination of "Froth" and "Venom."

The wheel of Pope's verse is memorable not for the way it breaks a butterfly but for how it generates richness out of the negative emotions felt toward Hervey. It is the excess that makes the difference, turning a malicious payback of malice into a thing of beauty and a joy forever.

Nothing would be easier than to extend the list of satires, epigrams and squibs tossed off by poets mocking or getting even with someone who has distressed them. But when we move to fiction, the relation between missile and target becomes less direct; indeed, the missile-target figure that more or less describes the bits of animus thrown off by Tennyson and Lawrence seems hardly useful. As the literary creation becomes lengthier and more leisured, what may have originated — at least in part — from the desire to pillory the offender becomes dispersed, complicated and modified by other motives less unequivocal than pure spite or malice.

H. G. Wells's attack on Henry James in a little-read mainly for the stirring response it provoked in James. In a preface to "Boon" in his "Collected Works" Wells spoke of it as "an outbreak of naughtiness," brought on by his boredom with "the pretentious solemnity of various literary artists and critics," among whom James was one. Wells, objected to James's novels because they weren't "rough enough." His characters were eviscerated, had no political opinions or lusts, didn't dream or go hungry or "perspire at poker," "He sets himself to pick the straws out of the hair of Life before he paints her," said Wells, adding in a rather sentimental formulation that without the straws she is no longer the mad woman

The Jamesian novel is "like a church lit but without a congregation to distract you, with every light and line focused on the high altar. And on the altar, reverently placed, intensely there, is a dead kitten, an ggshell, a bit of string."

This is good work in the tradition of Mark Twain's essay on the literary offenses of James Fenimore Cooper, except that Wells and James were contemporaries, friends of sorts who, with some reservations, had praised each other's work. James took the "nanghtiness" of "Boon" very hard; yet goaded by the attack, he responded with memorable sentences to Wells about why art mattered: "It is art that makes life, makes interest, makes importance, for our consideration and application of those things, and I know of no substitute whatever for the force and beauty of the process." the process." They never wrote to each other again, and within a few months James was dead. Wells had got off his barbs just in time for the Master to reply with one final, large affirmation of a life's devotion.

One of the best modern attempts to destroy a writer by parodying his style and ideas is Hemingway's guying of Sherwood Anderson in "The Torrents of Spring," his short novel published in 1926. This strange literary performance was in no sense a retaliation for some offense Anderson bad committed ist Hemineway. Indeed. Anderson had exerted his influence at Boni & Liveright - where he was a best-selling author — to help get Hemingway's book of stories "In Our Time" published the previous year. Such assistance did not deter Hemingway from striking at Anderson; in fact it may have sweetened the operation given the spiteful childishness of Hemingway's moral character and the fact that he resented being compared to Anderson as a writer.

Whatever can be said for Anderson's merits as a novelist and story writer, however, cannot be said for "Dark Laughter," his novel of 1925 that was the immediate occasion for Hemingway's attack. The satire of Anderson's primitivism is pretty broad. For example, Hemingway's thickheaded but "sensitive" hero, Yogi Johnson, falls in with some Indians and is

An Actress of All Works

ARIS — More than just about any actress, Glenda Jackson has shown is people that she can do just about anything, although she has not always thought and the same is a sailer house. so. In the early 1970s, for example, already an Oscar winner for Ken Russell's "Women and the in Love," she expressed reservations about her ability to play comedy, then went off to win a second Oscar for the comedy, "A Touch of Class."

The ability to do anything is one thing: Glenda Jackson actually goes out and does it. The one theatrical form she hasn't tried is ical comedy, and she is perfectly game for that although not sure that her voice would hold out for eight performances a week. Just in the past year or so in the theater, she has been in Eugene O'Neill's five-hour drama, "Strange Interlude," in which she is onstage throughout, Racine's "Phaedra," and a contemporary comedy,
"Across From the Garden of Allah."

This summer, right after winding up Robert Altman's zany film fares, "Beyond Therapy," in Paris, she went to the Lyric Theatre Hammersmith to ioin rehearsals for Lorra's mersmith to join rehearsals for Lorca's "The House of Bernardo Alba," directed by the Spanish actress Nuria Esperta. And right after that she will make "Business as Usual,"

a film by a total unknown. Jackson is a fluent, intelligent, no-nonsense woman: to call her a star would offend her and suggest a certain weakness. She despises any expressions of temperament:
"Part and parcel of the whole thing of acting is that you, the individual, don't exist," she said just before flying back to London. This doesn't mean that she won't use what she calls her clout to get projects she cares for affort on the grounds that if you have worked so hard to get a name, why not use it. It always strikes me as ironic that when a woman gets to an age where she's fairly experienced both as a woman and, if she's an actress, as an actress, there's nothing to capitalize on that combined experience in a continuum of roles. Two had to hunt them out and February 1. and I'm very lucky in that they've either come to me or I've found people who would be prepared to put them on. "Certainly in England there's never been a really particular interest on the part of peo-DESH __ (1370) mel (1219-1124 et lest let en rains killed it lest let en rains killed it lest let ple thought to be producers to put money into British subjects. And if you want to do anything that has the slightest hint of feminism, forget it because they get very frightened

In 1971 Jackson starred in John Schlesing er's "Sunday, Bloody Sunday" which she says had the most intelligent script she has read. Certainly it was one of the best films of the past 20 years and sadly it is hard to imagine such a film being made today.

"Where are they now? Not only did this one have an intelligent script but it presupposes an intelligent audience, while most pictures today assume that their audiences are blind, mentally retarded or two years old. It's television, of course."

What she finds missing in contemporary British films is contemporary Britain. "A great deal is happening in Britain at the moment. Britain's own sense of herself has changed and is in the process of changing, and I think we should be examining these changes. You can of course do it in the theater but the audience you touch in the theater is very small. I was thinking of film subjects that would be interesting to Britain and to the world outside. There is an undoubted lack of present concerns being treated in dramatic forms, theater or films, and I think we have to break that trend." Jackson's next film, "Business as Usual," is based on the true story of a woman who was fired from her job in Liverpool because she complained about sexual harassment in the office. "It's essentially about that, how you take a case of sexual harassment and try to prove it. I mean it's so difficult to define and argue it through. It's not only about England, it's also about a woman's view of

She brings to each role, even an off-thewall one like the psychiatrist in Beyond Therapy," a total commitment. Resolutely mour, she wins her audience on the stage by working through the text. She is literally compelling. It is in a sense a show of force and one in which the director, to her mind, is of relatively minor importance.

berself as opposed to how society sees her."

While it is the fashion these days for actors to inveigh against the power of directors, Jackson calls the director useless because the final ingredient of any performance is the audience; a perfect dress rehearsal means nothing and by the time of the first confrontation with the audience the director has, so to speak, gone home and the actor is alone.

"However much you rehearse a play, however much you research it, it's not complete until you have an audience because that's what it's all for, it's all for that. You're passing what the author wants to say to the audience and they may not like what he's saying, they may totally reject it, but you have to keep them sitting there long enough to complete his or her sentence. So it's always that balance of entertaining them on the one hand and making them listen on the other. And it's easier in a way to entertain them but if you entertain them you are quite often betraying the writer, and I don't be-lieve in that.

What is shocking is when the audience dictates what they want," she said. Silent battles with the audience are not rare. "Td sooner fight them than wake them up. Apathy is the killer." Each night presents a challenge. "The day is mine until midday and from midday on it's the play's, and I cannot use energy that I think I may need in the evening. People think you just go to the theater two hours before and that's it. It's not. I try not to do anything after midday unless I can do it and not notice that I'm doing it, because there's that great maw waiting at the 7:30 or 8 o'clock curtain and you've got to be ready

She prefers to plunge into rehearsals rather than prepare a role in advance. "The minute I say yes, my next thought is I can't do it, why have I said yes? So I sort of put off reality until I'm confronted with it. That way you don't have time for self-indulgence, you're actually concerned with the nitty-gritty of the work." She rarely goes to the theater and says she is a bad audience.

"I can't suspend disbelief, which I can do very easily for a film. I can sit through a lousy film, I find it very hard to sit through a lousy evening in the theater." She has bad stage fright; film fright, she says, is a different and milder fear. "It tends to be rather more embarrass-

"You're waiting for a camera and a camera is totally absorbed in what you're doing, you never have to work for its attention. It's not the same kind of fear as working in a theater where apart from everything else you have to make an audience, which is just a crowd sitting down until you turn it into an

It is the author who provides the bridge. Like the Garcia Lorca play Glenda Jackson is now rehearsing, her Phaedra was translated by David Macdonald, whom she greatly admires because his translations are dramatic rather than academic. "It is wonderful in 'Phaedra' to be able to do a play which pushes you to the very extremes while holding you on a very tight rein of verse structure. There's something wonderful about trying to hurl yourself over a cliff of human experience and still have to observe the line endings. That beat, that absolutely ruthless beat, and of course it's like all great verse dramas — if you trust it, it just holds you up. Shakespeare — when I did

She has played in New York quite often, but considers Broadway finished. "Broad-way has brought upon itself its disastrous situation. There is no theater there that I would consider valid. They're all looking for a success, whatever that is. I suppose a failure might attract a better crowd.

Theater, she thinks, is, or should be, more important than ever in a technological age. "I sometimes think no one's going to talk to anyone ever again.

"I do believe we have to be committed to some sort of live entertainment because we are moving toward a society dominated by machines. Live theater is like putting a finger taken to their chibhouse, with a splendid of Sarah Lawrence, was inevitable, since, pool table and a committee room with autographed photographs of Chief Bender, Francis Parkman, D. H. Lawrence, Chief Meyers (these two Chiefs being famous ball players) and a "full-length painting of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow" (doubtless in honor of "Hiawatha"). But the best parts of the parody can be appreciated only by readers familiar with the earnest tones and plodding rhythms of Anderson's sentences as, in "Dark Laughter," they describe his hero's aspirations to be a writer: "One day he had gone with Bernice to a meat market --- they were getting chops for dinner and he had noted the way an old fat meat-cutter in the place handled his tools. The sight had fascinated him and as he had stood in the place beside his wife, waiting his turn to be served, she began talking to him and he did not hear. What he was thinking about was the old meat-cutter, the deft quick hands of the old meat-cutter. They represented something to him. What was it?"

Hemingway's Yogi Johnson also has something on his mind, and it is conveyed to us through dogged repetition and artless questions when, as with Anderson's hero, a change of season brings troubled thoughts: "It was Spring, there was no doubt of that now, and he did not want a woman. He had worried about it a lot lately. . . . He had gone to the public library and asked for a book the night before. He looked at the libraries. He did not want her. librarian. He did not want her. . . . He passed a group of girls on their way home from High School. He looked carefully et all of them. He did not want a single one. Decidedly something was wrong. Was he going to pieces? Was this the end?"

Yet is this a parody of Anderson merely? In one of Hemingway's most interesting sto-ries from "In Our Time," "Soldier's Home," a soldier returns from World War I to his small town in Oklahoma and spends his days looking at the girls, with mixed feelings: "He did not like them when he saw them in the Greek's ice cream parlor. He did not want them themselves really. They were too complicated. There was something else. Vaguely he wanted a girl but he did not want to have to work to get her. He would have liked to have a girl but he did not want to spend a long time getting her." And so on in this vein. It is not that the soldier, Krebs, is contemptible or a fool; rather, that Heming-way is turning sentences around him in odd, designedly awkward (or movingly simple?) ways working toward a style. So the simple desire to score off Anderson becomes complicated, as Krebs, Anderson, Hemingway, the English sentence itself gets mixed together in a result more interesting and hard to locate than a purely mean-minded one.

Sometimes we are both teased and disappointed by what looks to be a novelist's attempt to get someone, a public literary figure about whom we're curious. It is often assumed that in his much-acclaimed novel "Pictures From an Institution" (1954), Randall Jarell set out to do in, among others, Harold Taylor and Mary McCarthy, Jarrell admitted that the identification of his character Dwight Robbins - the young president of a progressive small college named Benton - with Harold Taylor, the president

Jarrell said, there was only one young, curlyheaded president of a progressive college. Bot he resisted the notion that Gertrude Johnson, Benton's novelist in residence, should be "confused with Mary McCarthy"

— who had herself just published "The Groves of Academe," which groves were associated with Bard College. When he sent a portion of the novel to Partisan Review, with which Mary McCarthy was affiliated, in hopes they would publish it, Philip Rahv demurred because of the resemblances between the novelist Gertrude and the novelist McCarthy. Jarrell said readers who knew Jean Stafford thought she was Gertrude.

Probably the liveliest and most intense example of a recent novelist's setting out, within the action of his book, to settle scores with an antagonist is Philip Roth's portrait of the critic Milton Appel in "The Anatomy Lesson," the third book of his trilogy, "Zuckerman Bound," That Milton Appel is meant to stand for Irving Howe is patently clear, not only through resemblances between their literary and personal lives but, more specifically, because in 1972 Howe published in Commentary a strong-worded attack on Roth's fiction, accusing him of vulgarity and of selling out to an "audience" rather than striving to reach true "readers." In physical and mental pain, the suffering hero of "The Anatomy Lesson," Nathan Zuckerman, is quite simply furious with Appel's attack on his career ("that made Macduff's assault upon Macbeth look almost leskaddisin!") and with a mich program at lackadaisical") and with a subsequent attempt on Appel's part to involve Zuckerman in writing an Op-Ed piece about Israel. In the novel, Zuckerman telephones Appel and abuses him but after hanging up feels worse than before. At which point he hops a plane to Chicago with the intention of applying to medical school. When the passenger next to him asks what line of business he's in, Zuckerman replies that he's in pornography, that he publishes a dirty magazine called Lickety Split and that his name is Milton Appel. ("A-p-p-e-l. Accent on the second syllable. Je m'appelle Appel.") There follows much more, none of it to Appel's credit.

In Roth's bid at doing in an adversary and to a greater or lesser degree in the other instances of artistic savaging collected here, the missile is launched with the worst of intentions. Yet the target turns out to be not Sporus or Henry James or Sherwood Anderson or Irving Howe but rather some zone of aesthetic satisfaction in the reader, who is pleased to see mean- or bloody-mindedness. righteous indignation or irresponsible mischief organize itself into stanza or speech or scene in a manner as.

All people that can write or paint do tremble under my complaint, For I am a chicken and I can chirp; and my name is Thomas, Thomas Earp.

Nobody cares about Thomas Earp the art critic, but thanks to Lawrence's rhyme, his name lives on.

William H. Pritchard, Henry Clay Folger Professor of English at Amherst College, is writing a book about Randall Jarrell. He contributed this to the New York Times.

Japan's New Jazz Age

by Mary Ann Maskery

OYOHASHI, Japan - Toyohashi is not Newport, but it has aspi-rations, B.B. King does not usually do festivals. But he did Toyohashi, and he was not even the headliner. Ray Charles was. King's manager, Sidney Seidenberg, said King was there because of a call from an old friend. George Wein, who invented the Newport Jazz Festival, said, "I'm doing another festival."

Toyohashi is not a town that would attract big name acts, or much of anything else either. It is what would be called, even charitably, a back-water town, a semi-industrial area outside the city of Nagoya in central Japan. It is not blessed with scenic beauty or thriving business. It is not on any tourist itinerary. Even the young people express, more and more, recently, a desire to leave, and many do, to the more exciting appeal of Osaka and Tokyo.

The townspeople who promoted the festi-val said one of their intentions was to show the young people that Toyohashi could be a pretty exciting place after all. As John Phil-lips, one of the American promoters, said, "they wanted to put the town on the map."

Somehow, they managed to put together so many acts the performers themselves were surprised Ray Charles, B.B. King, Odetta, The Mighty Clouds of Joy, the New York Jazz Allstars, Odadaa, the Dirty Dozen Brass Band, and Sly Rider, e high-powered collection of soul, blues, jazz folk, and rock. It is music that is usually sold in Japanese record shops under the label, "contemporary black music."

B.B. King said he was "surprised everyone showed up." It was almost a last-minute affair, with some acts headed off for independent Asian tours. They didn't even have Toyohashi on their agenda when they left the U.S. But they got there. And the reception was intense and grateful. Keiko Ogawa, 30, a school teacher, said, "to be honest, I prefer rock. But this kind of thing is so important for the city, I just had to take part." She didn't know why the town was so fortunate. She kept asking everyone around her. "This is so rural, so country." She said the cultural level of the area was low, but maybe this will raise it. "I hope," she said.

The unlikely title for this unlikely event was the "Toyohashi Black Heritage Festival." Toyohashi has no black heritage to celebrate Many townspeople had never seen a black person before, but the festival committee wanted something different.

Thelms Thornton said she realized she

the city. "I was pretty lonely, until all the musicians started showing up, but people were nice, real nice." Thornton is a New Orleans chef, one of three invited to the festival to provide an authentic flavor. She was bending over a steaming batch of jamba-lays, sweating in the hot sun, when a young Japanese girl reached up to her, and gently wiped her face with a cold, wet towel. Jambalaya, Southern fried chicken, and sweet potato pone were selling as fast as they could be cooked, under a star-spangled, red white and blue sign offering "Black Heritage Food."

Jazz festivals are not new to Japan. They proliferate every summer. Japanese buy more jazz records, on ratio, than Americans. Blues and soul are also popular. Some groups were amused to realize the audience knew all the lyrics, even though they had never played Japan before.

Gospel is another category. But when the Mighty Clouds of Joy delivered their driving.

upbeat gospel sounds, the Japanese stamped their feet and swayed with the rhythm. Some treated it as a rock concert, took off their shirts and snapped them in the air. Others stood still, tears in their eyes.

One young man named the gospel group when asked his favorite act. "I don't know their name, but, you know, they had red coats?" When language failed him, he wriggled his shoulder, and rolled his eyes to Promoter Phillips acknowledged the "special appreciation for jazz in Japan." A young American booking agent who was there "as a friend," was more effusive. "They want only. the best. They understand immediately what's second rate. They don't have a Western European cultural strait jacket on their

Out in the audience, the response was certainly spontaneous, but perhaps not as educated as the promoters envisioned. One young man said only, "black music. I like it." He didn't know any names. And he was "really surprised" to hear the music in his city. Another mentioned Ray Charles and B.B. King. "I know the names. Just the names." Keiko Ogawa had never heard Ray Charles before, had never heard "that kind of music before." But she came back a second night to hear him again.

The black heritage theme caught the attention of a Tokyo-based group called the Japan-Afro-American Friendship Association. The group set up a booth, featuring photographs and biographies of famous black Americans. Most of the Japanese who stopped by kept asking questions about the performers on stage. Gerard K. Collier, an American who has lived in Japan for four years, said their purpose was to change the

The music, however, was an unquestioned success. Up to 15,000 people filled a baseball field each day, for three days and nights. It was a $12-million affair. That's what it cost Phillips said that they would have to wait for all the returns before they could be sure they broke even. South American Art PANISH-SPEAKING America is suddenly looming large on the art scene. Three exhibitions breaking new ground in pre-Columbian art, the colonial era and the 20th century are bound to have a profound impact on collectors attitudes and, more broadly, the way in which the public perceives the many facets of Latin American culture.

The most ambitious undertaking focus on the Maya. Dramatically titled "The Blood of Kings," it is at the Kimbell Art Museum in Fort Worth, Texas, where it will close Ang. 24 before moving to The Cleve-land Museum of Art (Oct. 8 through Dec. 14). Its importance lies in the catalog essay by two American scholars, Linda Schele and Mary Ellen Miller. Eight themes are dealt with; the royal person, kingship and the rite of accession, courtly life, bloodletting and the vicine court was a second accession. the vision quest, war and captive sacrifice, the ball game (as a gruesome sacrifice), death and the journey to Xibalba (the under-world), and kingship and the Maya cosmos.

Two points are made with drumming insistence. One is the bloodthirsty character of Maya culture, dominated by warfare and ritual sacrifice, contrary to the myth cultivated for a century until the 1960s. The other is the paramount role of kingship in Maya societies, which saw it as the cornerstone of the order of the cosmos. Statements such as these can now be made with certainty, the authors insist. In addition to the scenes that may be seen carved in low relief on monnments or painted on clay vessels, historians have the evidence of Maya inscriptions neglected until the 1960s. The story of the unraveling of the Maya hieroglyphs is one of the more entertaining parts of the essay, though it has to be pieced together from scattered bits of information in a volume that hardly qualifies as light reading.

For two centuries, scholars engaged in Maya studies looked at the pictograms carved on the reliefs without making sectous attempts to decipher them. This would have been excusable had it not been for the existence of a key document, which they ignored.

Diego de Landa, the first bishop of Yuca-tan, one of the great centers of Maya culture in southern Mexico, displayed so much zeal in wiping out the indigenous religion, destroying shrines and burning books that he had to be called back to Spain by the Inquisition in 1568. To help himself in his defense, Landa wrote an account of Yucatan life in which he described Maya cyclical rimals, explained their calendar and gave an account of his systematic destruction of their ble. King repeated the sunt manuscripts.

Fortunately, Landa also told how he sat down one very hot day with a Maya who could read the glyphs. Landa wrote down the Spanish alphabet, pronounced each corre-sponding sound and asked for glyphic equivalents. These he carefully copied with the corresponding transcription in his neat, slightly children hand, reproduced in the Kunbell Art Museum book. Because the Maya script is essentially syllabic, and to some extent ideogrammic, what the man gave the bishop was not the letter equiva-lents but the sound of the Spanish letters transcribed in the Maya system.

The bishop, exasperated when he realized he was not getting single signs for single letters, asked the Maya informant to write anything he wanted. This request got him four signs, with the syllabic value ma in ka ti, which as Schele puts it, means in Mayan, "I don't wanna."

The priceless value of this document was not recognized until 1952. That year a Soviet specialist in the comparative study of writing systems, Yuri Knorosov, revived the Landa alphabet; which had long been discredited by Mayanists who could not make heads or tails of it. Taking a famous manuscript pre-served in Dresden, Knorosov submitted phonetic syllabic renderings for it. This was the starting point that led to further discov-eries. The names of rulers spelled phonetical-ly were recognized by David H. Kelley at Chichen Itza. The Harvard scholar Tatiana Proskouriskoff demonstrated in 1960 that Maya glyphs and art recounted historical events and further showed that two rulers were celebrated in text and image as great an epigrapher who is associate professor of art at the University of Texas, and Miller, associate professor of the history of art at Yale, have identified some historical scenes and various rites. They submit an overall reading of the art and culture of the Maya that is new. How much of it will stand the test of time is another matter.

Many interpretations are to some extent conjectural. One may regret that the frontier between established fact and hypothetical reconstruction is not always made crystal clear. This may be partly because the text is exceedingly difficult for the layman to follow. It bristles with unfamiliar names, notions, events.

The running commentary of some images simple as it is in essence, gets impossible to follow after a few lines of this kind: "Lintel 8 (Fig. V.3) shows Bird Jaguar taking a captive — an event that occurred the same day he dressed for battle. Lintel 42 of structure 42 shows Bird Jaguar exchanging God K staffs greatest achievement of the Maya world. with a cahal, one of his governors; Lintel 5 Another traveling exhibition featuring shows him . . . " Still, this is fascinating Latin America is accompanied by a book whose feats are carved on these lintels from the monuments at Yaxchilán, in Chiapas province, Mexico. The authors tell us how Bird Jaguar seizes his captive, Jeweled Skull, on May 9, 755 — names and datings carved on the bas relief, as Tatiana Proskouriakoff remains one of the main objects of any such exhibition - the beauty of the art. This, the authors say, was one of the two guidelines to their selection. They have dragged out of museum reserve collections some of the finest objects of Maya art. Not only do they show the lintels from Yaxchilán, taken to England by Alfred Mandslay in 1882, but they found a Preclassic jade mask that had rested "unknown in the vaults of the British Museum since the late 19th century."

Many of the greatest pieces of Maya art, however, could not even be considered, some because they were not fit to travel. In order to see one of the most beautiful carvings ing captive seated on his heels — one has to make the trip to Tonina in northeastern Chiapas and look for it in the susseum built on the site. Other works were not included in the exhibition because they are in private possession and "might have a future commercial life." This is a laudable principle, but it leaves out such masterpieces as the lime-stone throne in the collection of José and Jacqueline Saenz in Mexico, to which Claude-François Baudez and Pierre Becquelin recently drew attention in their volume "Les Mayas," published by Gallimard in Paris in 1984.

For those who want to form an up-to-date idea of Maya culture, "Les Mayas" — a major book in which several ideas put for-ward in "The Blood of Kings" are spelled out in detail, starting with the gory character of Maya rituals and the warfike nature of the society — is a necessary complement to the Kimbell publication, if only to remind the reader that architecture was probably the material. Bird Jaguar is a historical character The emphasis on deciphering scripts and events tends to deflect attention from what Initiated by the Detroit Institute of Arts, the first retrospective to cover the entire range of the Mexican painter Diego Rivera moved from Detroit to the Philadelphia Museum of Art, where it closes Sunday before being sent to the Mu-seo del Palacio de Bellas Artes in Mexico Sept. 29 through Jan: 4; 1987 showings in Madrid and West Berlin).

Even among the many art collectors who are Rivera fans, few suspected that he had such a motley career. They may not be unduby the se pencil of a classical standing figure in a Greek drapery leaning against an urn, dated 1898 (Diego was only 12 when he drew it, with remarkable skill); they will be more impressed by the thoroughly original vision revealed a year or so earlier by an undated landscape in oils with a mountain capped by snow at sunset. When he discovered modern European art in Spain in 1906, Rivera seemed equally available for every style and, more remarkably, capable of innovating in every one of them.

He did a marvelous pastel in 1906 with a touch of Monet and Czzanne, "Confluence of the Rivers." "Dead Horse," in charcoal and gouache, dated the same year, is half Nabi, half Symbolist. In 1908, Rivera developed a very personal Fauve-related style illustrated by "La calle de Avila." He had a go at Pointilliste landscape painting in 1911, and from 1913 experimented with every aspect of Cubism with an intensity in his color scheme and a strong Expressionist feel that gives it a highly distinctive mark. Rivera's Paris years (1913-21) — during which he evolved this manner and others including an

by Max Wykes-Joyce

ONDON — Though "Nordic Summer Evening" by the Swede Richard Bergh (1858-1919), portraying a romantic couple gazing from a gar-den balcony over a placid lake, partly in-spired the title of the exhibition "Dreams of a Summer Night" downstairs at the Hay-ward Gallery, it is well to remind oneself that while the inidnight sun prevails in Scandina-via from the second week in May to the last week in July, the contrary is the case from mid-November to the last week in January. Midday darkness predominates in more than half of the 112 exhibits in this show of Scandinavian painting at the turn of the century, presented by the Arts Council.

Indeed, fewer than one-fifth of the works Indeed, fewer than one-fifth of the works can be strictly construed as summer paintings. Six of these, in addition to the Bergh carvas, have "Summer Evening/Night" titles: by the Dane Viggo Johansen (1851-1935); the Norwegian Kitty Kielend (1843-1914), a truly happy summer landscapist, judging by her two paintings in the show; Peder Severin Kroyer (1851-1909), Norwegian by hirth but Danish educated and based, whose work is near-Impressionist in its treatment of light (his studies included a based, whose work is near-impressions in its treatment of light (his studies included a spell in the Bonnat studio in Paris); and the Norwegians Eilif Peterssen (1852-1928), Harald Sohlberg (1869-1935) and Erik Wertnskiold (1855-1938), the last of whom also trained in Paris; with Bastien-Lepage, and became a friend of the French Impressionity of the relation of the Prench Impressionity of the Prench sits after writing a seminal article about them in 1882. A larger group of the exhibits deal neither with summer light nor-winter dark. Many are telling portraits of such luminaries as Henrik Ibsen (by Erik Werenskield), "Georg Brandes at the University of Copenhagen" (by Harald Slott-Moller), the Norwegian poet Arne Garberg, predominant in the New Norwegian movement that liberated his language from a marked Danish influence (by Eilif Peterssen) and Ludvig Josephson, stage manager of the Stockholm Opera, portrayed by his nephew Ernst Josephson (1851-1906) directing "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

There is a happily optimistic sequence of 26 watercolors, entitled "A Home," painted from 1894 onward by Carl Larsson (1853-1919) at his house in Dalarma, Sweden, now the Larsson Museum. He and his wife, Karin furnished their home partly in the spirit in, furnished their home partly in the spirit in, furnished their bome partly in the spirit of the arts and crafts movement, partly in the local peasant fashion, partly in the 18th-century Swedish style of King Gustavus III. Typical of the intimist interiors is "The Kitchen," the walls pineclad, pots bubbling on the great stove, a kitten playing, the Larsson daughters busying themselves.

That Larsson was capable of major oil paintings is evidenced by his vast "Self Portrait: In Front of the Mirror," which captures his advice to his artist contemporaries.

All too few Scandinavian artists seem to have followed his advice. It in no way diminhave followed his advice. It in no way diminishes the quality of the painting to say that the darkness, gloom and wilderness portrayed in so much of this work is a trifle overpowering. The very titles ring like the passing bell — "A Funeral," by Anna Ancher (1859-1935); "Boy With a Skull," by Magnus Enckell (1870-1925); "Wilderness, Keralian Landscape," by Pekka Halonen (1865-1933); "The Black Death," a sequence of 12 large drawings need as book illustraof 12 large drawings used as book illustra-tions, by Theodor Kittelsen (1857-1914); and a cluster of paintings by Edward Munch that includes "Melancholy," a glmn person-age meditating at a lake's shore, a sad female figure in "Moonlight" and the frustrated man and flaunting temptress of "Ashes."

Personal turmoil is even more exemplified by a group of violent Expressionist near-abstracts by the Swedish playwright August Strindberg (1849-1912), of which the most significant are the "Lonely Poisonous Mush-room" of 1893, and the "Inferno Painting" of 1901, which expressed his disorientation when his third wife, the young Harriet Bosse, left him soon after their marriage.

The traditional melancholy and violence of the Sagas is best summarized in three paintings by the Finn Akseli Gallen-Kallela (1865-1931), who until 1904 signed his work Axel Gallen. They illustrate events from the epic poem Kalevala.

ECONOMIC SCENE

Asia's Prospects Hinge On Chinese Experiment

First of two articles By ARTHUR WALDRON International Herald Tribune

RINCETON, New Jersey — January 6, 1986 is probably as good a date as any to take as the top of the China bull market. That was the day that Time magazine proclaimed Deng Xiaoping its "Man of the Year," devoted 28 pages to his reforms, and predicted that "if they work, the world will not be the same." Time acknowledged that the reforms were a big gamble, but adopted an upbeat tone nevertheless. In the last few months, however, a series of negative reports has emerged. These raise the question of what will happen, both emerged. These raise the question of what will happen, both within China and in the Asian trading world, if the reforms don't work — or, perhaps more accurately, don't live up to expecta-

The stability of the current Chinese leadership and its ability to transfer power peacefully depend very much on the success of its economic policies. Much of the economic and political future of the rest of Asia depends, in turn, on that stable transfer of power and the continuity in Chinese policy that would result.

This is because Deng's leadership has taken China off the sidelines of world economics and politics. From 1975 to 1985, a chinese foreign trade surged from about $14 billion to $59.2 billion. China is important politically as well: At the moment, its crucial influence is most clearly reflected in its role as a billion of Hong Kong's future. arbiter of Hong Kong's future.

China's new involvement has brought it greater responsibility for the future of Asia. If the nation handles its new role well, the whole region can become more secure. If it fails, the delicate fabric of Asian prosperity will begin to fray.

Internal politics will determine China's behavior. Briefly, the all-important political strategy behind Mr. Deng's economic reforms was to use foreign resources to break the stagnation into which the Chinese economy had fallen by the 1970s, and then to use that economic success to disarm opponents of further

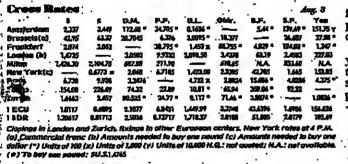

I WAS a risky strategy. Economists rightly doubted whether such measures as setting up special economic zones and permitting outright foreign investment really went far enough, drastic as they were by Chinese standards. And students of Chinese politics wondered whether the spectacle of privileged foreigners in China might once again trigger the kind of nationalistic resentment so evident in the 1920s and 1930s.

The months since Time's cover story have lent substance to such fears: Faced with a chronic trade deficit that totaled $11.4 billion last year, China has devalued her currency by 24.5 percent against the U.S. dollar since the beginning of 1985. With the reption of some hotels, few joint ventures are profitable. Foreign investment, which comes mostly from Hong Kong, fell 20 percent in the first six months of this year from the first half of 1985. And anyone who has talked much with foreign businessmen in Beijing can testify to their mood of frustration, even

· In such an atmosphere, some nationalistic reaction is inevitable on the Chinese side. Students often have spearheaded the protests, and the bitterness spilled over last year into marches protesting Japanese economic penetration. Members of the Chinese government feel resentment too. Who

GDP Up 0.8% in Singapore

Forecast for Year Revised Upward

SINGAPORE — Singapore's gross domestic product, adjusted for inflation, grew 0.3 percent in the second quarter of 1986 compared with a year earlier, the Ministry of Trade and Industry said Friday. It had declined 3.4 percent in the first quarter.

the first quarter.
GDP, the country's total output of goods and services, minus income from operations abroad, may achieve 1 percent to 2 percent growth in the full year, the ministry aid in a report.

The government's last forecast for 1986 was for no growth. GDP declined by 1.8 percent in 1985, after growing 8.2 percent in 1984.

The second-quarter improvement followed four quarters of year-to-year declines. The main factor in the improvement was a sharp turnaround in the manufacturing sector to growth of 4.1 percent from shrinkage of 7.4 percent in the first quarter, the ministry said.

Activity in electronics improved by 25.1 percent as Japanese companies diverted production of consumer goods from Japan, it said. Growth in financial and business services improved to 4.4 percent from 2.5 percent because of a stock market rally and increased offshore business, the ministry said. Transport and communications activity rose 7.6 percent, compared with growth of 8.3 percent in the In the whole of 1985, manufac-turing activity fell 7.3 percent, it said, commerce fell 1.5 percent and construction 14.3 percent, but transport and communications activity improved 3 percent and financial and business services 2.6

The ministry said the second-quarter recovery had to be interpreted cantionsly.

Expansion is still patchy, it said, led mainly by electronics, transport and communications, and the manufacturing turnaround emerged only in June,
"Whether the June performance
"Whether the June performance to be can be sustained remains to be seen," the report said.

The unemployment rate at the end of June was 6.5 percent, up from 6.3 percent at the end of market, it said.

Investment commitments in the first half were 591 million Singapore dollars ($272.1 million), hitle changed from the first half of 1985. . But total commitments for the year are likely: to exceed the 1985 total of 1.1 billion dollars as the strong yen creates opportunities for promoting investment.

NEW YORK — As the oews that Sumitomo Bank Ltd. was negotiating to buy a large stake in Goldman, Sachs & Co. began to sink in, professionals at the Wall Street firm were quick to quip that it will change its name to Goldman, Sake.

The humor was light, suggesting that, though the agreement is not signed, the startling news was beginning to be accepted at a firm that has oever had an outside investor.

Buf it took Goldman's senior partners months to come this far. and to get used to the idea. Although Goldman's management committee had discussed in Febmary the possibility of selling shares to the public, according to sources close to the firm, John L. Weinberg, Goldman's chairman, was reportedly startled when first approached by Sumitomo in

The approach was taken seri-ously, though, and what followed was a series of long and complex negotiations. Advising Sumi-tomo was Lazard Frères & Co. and its senior partner, Felix G. Rohatyn.

Spurring Goldman to talk were two factors, sources close to the firm said Thursday. There was the prospect, they said, of the withdrawal over coming years of a significant amount of capital, perhaps more than $150 million, by retiring partners.

Also, Goldman had suffered as much as $200 million, his Rockefeller Center office prompting some partners to seek a financial cushion against their personal capital being eroded by such impredictable setbacks, the sources, who asked not to be

The March meeting in Mr. Weinberg's office on Wall Street was a face-to-face encounter with Koh Komatsu, Sumitomo's president, according to the sources. That first meeting had followed two months of preliminary discussions between Sumitomo, Lazard and McKinsey & Co., a management-consulting firm that had been working with Somitomo for several years on a strategy for the future.

McKinsey had approached Mr. Rohatyn late last December about taking on Sumitomo as a client. He was not told the name of the Japanese bank, or the nature of the transaction it had in "Implicit was always the idea that they wanted a passive win-dow into the investment-banking business," Mr. Rohatyn commented, "I told them that we had the highest regard for Goldman, that they were one of the bestmanaged, if oot the best-managed, firms in the business."

Mr. Roharyn flew to Tokyo with his wife in February to meet with Sumitomo's top officers. So strict was the secrecy that Mr. Rohatyn was not even able to tell his son, who works at an American bank in Tokyo, the real purpose of the two-day visit.

As a further precaution, he met with the Sumitomo officers in a guest house owned by the

After weighing Sumitomo's sims and how they might be met, much of this through an interpreter, Mr. Rohatyn set up the March meeting with Mr. Wein-berg, to whom the idea had not yet been broached. At first, Goldman was cool to the idea, several sources said, but was willing to talk because of longstanding relations with Sumi-

Platinum Rises Above $500 On Supply Fears LONDON — The price of plati-num soared above $500 an ounce lytic converters for automobile

Friday for the first time since 1981, and analysts predicted a further rise because of concern over South African supplies.

Platinum, which a year ago cost only $235 an ounce, was fixed in London at $502.25, up from a morning fix of $489.75. On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the spot price was $519.60, up $25 for the day. for the day.

A New York trader described as "a real threat" the possibility that South Africa, which supplies more than 80 percent of the West's platinum and 60 percent of its gold, could strike back against external pressure by reducing sales to nations imposing economic sanctions.

Dealers noted that although platinum was still far off its record of $1,050 an ounce, touched in ear-ly 1980, it had already jumped by arly $50 from its level a week ago

"Traders are not ruling out a price rally to $600 this year if sup-plies are seriously interfered with," said Martin McNeill of the brokerage Dominick & Dominick in New York

Traders said platinum's rise was being accelerated by speculation, especially in the United States, although there was demand in London from overseas customers, inchiding Swiss and Middle Eastern

Some analysts said the surge could herald a significant uptrend in gold and noted that platinum led gold upward during the run of 1979-80.

In general heavy demand on pre-cious metals markets Friday, gold rose to $369 an ounce from a morning fix of $361.85. Early trading in gold had been quiet, with dealers reporting mostly professional ac-tivity, but once gold overcame the resistance it had encountered at around $363 Thursday, fresh activity was triggered, traders said.

Some dealers took a cautious view, noting that platinum's premi-um over gold had risen as far as $128 an ounce, compared with less than $50 only six months ago, and saying that platinum might be due for a period of consolidation after its rapid advance.

tion. In its first year, it cut inflation from a 1,128-percent annual rate to a 50.1-percent rate. Commerce Secretariat officials on Thursday staged a price-control operation, inspecting stores and su-permarkets for violations of maxi-mum prices. An official said several businesses were closed for violating pricing restrictions.

José Luis Machinea, undersecretary of economic policy, said dur-ing a radio program that the in-crease in prices was caused by rising demand and a lack of competition between businessmen after a partial price thaw in April.

"We are going to implant a stricter fiscal and monetary policy and implement a series of structur-al measures," Mr. Machinea said. He denied news reports that the austral would be devalued by 10 "All that has happened is that a mood has been created and some dealers have become very nervous on the increase of the rate of inflation," he said.

As Industrial Losses Rise in China, Official Calls for Factory Closures

BEIJING — China, which is for the first time threatening unprofitable factories with closure, registered a sharp increase in industrial losses during the first half of this year, the Xinhua news agency said Friday.

It quoted an unidentified senior government official as saying that turning unprofitable enterprises into profitable ones is vital to China's efforts to balance its budget.

The agency said that industrial losses amounted to 2.01 billion yuan ($543 million) in the first half of this year, 75 percent of the total for

The official called for the wider implementation of the initiative-based "responsibility system" based on initiative put forward by the Chinese leader, Deng Xiaoping, to turn unprofitable businesses into money-makers within a prescribed period.

"Meanwhile, we must resolutely shut down those factories suffering chronic losses and producing poor-quality goods at high cost," the official said.

Friday's announcement came less than a week after the first bankruptcy in Communist China's 36-year history. Officials in the northeastern industrial city of Shenyang said Sunday that they had closed an unprofitable factory under a draft bankruptcy law that is

Allegheny's Chairman Resigns Under Pressure

The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Robert J. Buckley, embattled chairman of Allegheny International Inc., resigned Friday, and the board named a division president, Oliver S. Travers Jr., to put the company back on track.

Mr. Buckley, 62, voluntarily moved up his plan to resign by year's end because "he felt he no longer could provide effective leadership to the company in light of recent publicity," the board said in a letter to shareholders.

Business Week magazane recently reported a web of questionable financial practices and conflicts of interests at the corporation, which reported a loss of $109 million in 1985 on revenue of $2.1 billion.

是是 Lik. Rescues 2 Tin Mines In Cornwall

LONDON - The British government agreed Friday to aid the 3,000-year-old tin industry in Cornwall, which has been living on borrowed time since tin prices coled in the international market last year. Trade and Industry Minister Pani Channon said the government will provide an interest-free loan of up to £15 million ($22.1 million) to Carnon Consolidated, a subsidiary of the international mining company Rio Tinto Zinc, to help keep its Wheal Jane and South Crofty

RTZ had warned that without government aid, the mines would close Aug. 18. The mines are the last two of any significant size in Cornwall, an economically troubled region in southwest England. The rescue package, which inchides government guarantees of commercial loans of up to £10 miltion, will save 640 jobs at the Wheal Jane and South Crofty mines, and several hundred others at supplier companies in Comwall. The aid, which followed months of negotiations between Mr. Channon and RTZ, will help the corpo-ration pursue a £31-million development program spanning the next

The aim is to make the mines competitive by cutting costs through a reduction in tin production and in the numbers employed at the mines. But output is planned to increase to above 1985 levels when development is completed.

said at a news conference. The order came after weeks of financial collapse. Mr. Daim said 17 public accounting companies assisting the investigation would report on the viability of each cooperative, examine the quality of loans, investments and other assets and report on instances of fraud or criminal breach of trust.

Mr. Daim said the government would not hesitate to act against anyone found responsible for fraud runs on several deposit-taking co-operatives that, officials said, had tives, whose members are largely taken some of them to the brink of from Malaysia's lower-income

Friends and relatives say his balanced perspective will help Mr. Armacost during his current woes.

"He is not in easy circum stances," Peter Armacost said. But Sam has the intellectual and spiritual resources that will see him through."

Mr. Armacost, himself, seemed philosophical as he ushered his visitor from his 40th-story office in the bank's world headquarters building, which the company sold last year to help cover loan losses.

Gesturing toward his desk, he said, "I'm not hiding under there." And he added, "There's a lot of opportunity in this world."

Even a package of severe austerwith approval.

But businessmen and investors have become more critical of recent economic decisions by Mr. Garcia's center-left government.

Soon after Mr. García came to power, the government devalued the Peruvian currency by 12 percent, froze the exchange rate for the quarters, U.S. dollar and for bank accounts in U.S. currency, and froze the prices of all goods and services.

The across-the-board price freezes never went fully into effect, however, and inflation has not been fully overcome. Prices have risen about 68 percent over the last past 12 months, but that figure is significantly lower than the 185percent annual inflation rate under from American companies. "There's been a definite change in the psychological climate for investing in France," said Henri Triebel, director of the French Industrial Development Agency in New York. "Since we have a conservative government, people in business tend to have more confidence."

Mr. Triebel said he hoped to improve on the agency's performance in 1985, when it played a role in attracting 80 U.S. companies to expand or start manufacturing operations in France. There are about 720 U.S. compamiss with manufacturing opera-tions in France. They employ about 237,000 people and give the United States the largest industrial pres-panies that was missing. Mr. Triebel, who is responsible for industrial-prospecting efforusin New York and oversees similar offices in Chicago, Houston and Los Angeles, said the agency had 120 prospects exploring possible ventures in France.

Over the past several years, most new American investments, in France resulted from U.S. companies purchasing ailing French con-cerns, many in the 50-employee range, and using them as a way to enter the French market or perhaps employing them as a base for expansion throughout Europe, In fact, the agency offers American prospects a list of troubled French companies in need of new owners and American business know-how.

"American companies tend todo national trade, while the French tend to be weak in these areas," Mr. tion, making it very difficult for dustrial investments in France last Triebel said. Good Reception for 3d Leg Of U.S. Treasury Refunding

By Susan F. Rasky

NEW YORK — U.S. credit markets absorbed the third and final leg of the Treasury's $28 billion quarterly refunding in considerably better shape than results of the first two auctions would have

The average yield for the $9 billion in 7.25-percent 30-year bonds sold by the Treasury on Thursday was 7.63 percent, sharply higher than the 7.37 percent yield at the previous refunding in May and a reflection of the market trepidation that preceded the suction. Thursday's sale was a reopening of the May issue.

In the hectic tracing before and after the auction, there was considerable confusion about the extent of Japanese buying. Estimates ranged from a rather weak $2 billion to as much as $6 billion, which would be close to the amount Japanese investors are said to have purchased at the May refunding.

A spurt in the price of Treasury securities following the 1 P.M. deadline for submitting auction bids suggested that the markets were quite prepared to accept the high end of the estimates. By the end of the day, the price of the long band was 96 23/32, up 18/32 from Wednesday, to yield 7.53 percent. The yield for the long band in when-issued trading hovered between 7.53 percent and 7.54 percent.

. The price for the new 10-year note suctioned on Wednesday was 99 31/32, up 21/32 from the average auction price, to yield 7.38 percent. The price of the new three-year note anctioned on Tuesday was 99

24/32, up 5/32 from Wednesday, to yield 6.72 percent. "The auction went well, although probably not as well as the market is trading," said Michael Grunebaum, executive vice president for government bonds at Yamaichi International Inc., one of the four major Japanese-owned securities firms here. "This was an American auction, priced by U.S. dealers, with significant Japanese participation." He said his own estimate of Japanese purchases was $2.5 billion to $3 billion.

All of this should sound faintly alarming, as indeed it is. But before considering the more sober scenarios about China's future that must replace the overly rosy predictions of just a few months ago, let us note one important fact: Despite all the negative news, the general economic situation in China is almost certainly better today that at any time since the "socialist transformation" began in earnest in 1954.

The current bearish mood is more the product of disappointed expectations than of absolute failures. A year ago, some people halfexpected an economic miracle. What they got was industrial growth at an annualized 4.9 percent in the first half of 1986; respeciable, though no pot of gold.

CELEBRATING THE WILD MUSH-ROOM: A Passionate Quest

WHY would anyone want to look for, let alone eat, fungi? For any number of reasons, according to this entertaining celebration of wild mushrooms by Sara Ann Friedman. They can be delicious, a far sight better than the bland commercial variety. They are fascinating to hunt and study, especially rare ones like the morel, which many mycophiles consider the Moby Dick of mushrooms. And they are sensual and erotic, not only in appearance but often, too, in taste, texture and smell.

Bot the more interesting question that Friedman addresses is, why would anyone not want to hunt and devour fungi? The answers here seem more compelling, at least on the printed page. Wild mushrooms are dangerous: You can get poisoned to death if you get careless. They are repellent: As Friedman observes, in some minds, everything putrescent and dangerous is associated with fungi.

"In a dazzling display of etymological virtuosity," she writes, a retired banker named Gordon Wasson dict one another about which species are poisonous.

The system of classifying fungi, based primarily on field characteristics, "is a century behind the other biological sciences," and "only in recent years have has "uncovered a kinship between fungi, toadstools, poison, frogstools, witcheraft, Satan in all his disguises, imps, filth, foulness, toadstools and stools of another sort, udders, sponges, and finally to the source of all life — the womb."

All the same, Friedman — who teaches writing in New York City and has published four previous books, including "Looking for Mushrooms" — adores fungi to the point of obsession. True, she is always careful to follow her cardinal rule, "Only eat a mushroom you can positively identify (as edible, of course)." Still, she has a police record in the Catskills for trespassing. And, as she writes: "There are days when a willow tree looks just like a bear's head fungus and the orange roof of a Howard Johnson's turns into a chanterelle."

In "Celebrating the Wild Mushroom," she has translated her obsession into a charming and instructive experience. Recounting the seasons of a typical year - from the early spring, when she arkens to rumors of morels, to the onset of winter, when she dreams of ruling a truffle orchard — she manages gracefully to weave together every scrap of information about mushrooms from the art of identilying them to their history, mythology, taxonomy, biology, chemistry, toxicology, pharmacology, gastronomy, and bibliography.

ta muscaria; "and Christ was merely a personification of that cult — a metaphor for the mashroom."

The tiny fungus known as Piloboha (meaning "hat-throwa") crystallims is such "a marvel of engineering and a bundle of energy" that it builds up enough turbopressure to send its spore flying six feet.

Indeed, except for its lack of a glossary, the only thing that Friedman's book fails to provide us is the actual taste and smell of muchocans. Of sens lack. actual taste and smell of mushrooms. (Diana Jacobs's delicate line drawings take care of their appearance.) Yet the author inspires the reader to visit a food specialty store, where at least a few of her 20 favorite edibles should be available. Who can predict what adventures are in store for us after that? Judging from Friedman's own experience, the earth's the limit.

Norman Shoots 65, A Course Record, to Lead PGA Tourney

By Gordon S. White Jr.

TOLEDO, Ohio - Eighteen days after winning the British Open, Greg Norman set out Thurs-day after his second major victory with an Inverness Club course record of six-under-par 65 in the opening round of the 68th PGA

The 31-year-old Australian held a two-shot lead over Craig Stadler and Phil Blackmar in his continuing effort to establish himself as the dominant player in professional golf. His 65 eclipsed Hale Irwin's modern Inverness mark of 67, set in the third round of the 1979 United States Open.

Norman, who led going into the final rounds of the Masters and the U.S. and British opens, is riding one of the hottest streaks in recent years. He leads the PGA Tour in money won and has three victories and three seconds in his last 10

Then, at the par-5 eighth, he had more than he could handle when his drive went through the fairway at the dogleg into the right rough behind trees. Caution proved the wiser move, so he pitched sideways just to get back onto the fairway.

McEnroe to the Rescue Is Still Riding Roughshod

By Tony Komheiser

McEnroe traditionally says he is having fun out there on the court, but as Fleming observed, "Sometimes when you look at him it's hard to see." Reflecting on a minor line call that irked McEntoe in a major way, Fleming said, "If he reacts like that once a match, he'll have an vicer in a week."

McEnroe could hardly deny that, especially after admitting that his prolonged reaction physically ill.

At an earlier press conference there had been a 70-minute stream-of-conscious rumblefish with the underlying theme of how tough it was to be John McEnroe. For example: "I don't think there is any other athlete in any other sport who goes through nearly what I go through." Why is it that at the end of these sessions one is always tempted to say, "That'll be $75, John. See you next week."

But the fact that so many people did, indeed, come to this tournament indicates how important McEnroe is to the welfare of tennis. And he knows it. He is right on both counts when he says, "I think tennis is bor-ing. f think it was boring when I was there, also. But I make it less boring."

Some Sage Words From the Unwise Los Angeles Times Service If you like one-liners, there are more than 300 pages of them in "Sportswit," a Fawcett Crest paperback compiled by Lee Green. Following are some selections. The people quoted are identified by the positions they held at the time they were speaking:

Keeping the 'Helga' Secret

C HADDS FORD, Pennsylvania — In a third-floor gallery of the Brandywine River Museum here, there itangs a dry-brush watercolor by Andrew Wyeth. It portrays a striking blond nude by an open window, She is glancing across the room toward an unseen object or person, in apparent expectation. The painting is titled, "Lovers."

Nearby, in a climate-controlled vault, nearly 240 paintings and drawings of the same woman are stored on wire racks that reach to the ceiling. Like the gallery hanging, all display the brilliant texture that distinguishes many of Wyeth's works. And all are of a mystery woman named Helga. Here is Helga asleep. Over there is Helga against a stark tree trunk, her long Teutonic braids resting against the shoulders of an olive cape coat.

The Helga works, kept secret by their creator during the 15 years he fashioned them from 1970 to 1985, constitute a major new segment of Wyeth's output. Their multimillion-dollar purchase by a Pennsylvania collector, disclosed Tuesday, promises to make Helga as renowned a subject as Christina Olson and Siri Erickson, two other Wyeth models.

But who is Helga? Wyeth won't say, nor will his friends. Nor, if a day's questioning of residents of this tranquil community on the Brandywine River southwest of Philadelphia is any indication, will anyone in a town that fiercely admires and protects its most famous

As for the people of Chadds Ford, Sheppard said: "They've learned to live with him. He trusts them and they trust him."

Connoisseur magazine and a for-mer director of New York's Metro-"Looks familiar," a waitress at "Looks familiar," a waitress at politan Museum of Art, said Wyeth Hank's Place, a local restaurant, had told him in June that Helga said when a picture of Helga as painted by Wyeth was shown to her had gone back to West Germany, and Helga was identified by name. Not sure I've seen her, though,"

That could be someone from the Knerner house as a studio to Maine," said Rick Taylor, a garage paint Helga. She helped nurse the mechanic in this town where almost everybody is said to know almost everybody else. "It doesn't subject. look like anyone from around here. We don't recognize her." And so it went, at place after place.

Jeffrey Schaire, the editor of Art and Antiques magazine, said Wy-eth told him he had been hiding the quent."

By Berty Cuniberti Los Angeles Times Service PRINCE FREDERICK, Maryland — He is, quite simply, the talk of the Pentagon. But here on the tobacco farms

nestled between Chesapeake Bay fishing villages, Tom Clancy is not known as the author of the military thriller "Hunt for Red October," and a second war novel, the just published "Red Storm

Here Clancy is still what he was before he hit the best-seller lists out of nowhere with the first book he ever attempted --- an intricate, modern war scenario so suspenseful and realistic that critics thrust him in the same category with revered military writers such as Jules Verne ("Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea"), H. G. Wells ("The War of the Worlds") and General John Hackett, whose essay, "The Third World War," was said to be kept at President Carter's bedside table.

Here, in a quiet hamlet of 1,700 people four miles (6.5 kilometers) nland from the Chesapeake, Tom Clancy is an insurance salesman. Although Clancy estimates be will earn $2 million from his first two books, he will continue to sell automobile, boat and home-owner policies (no life insurance -"That's morbid!") for the foreseeable future. Since he graduated from Loyola College in Baltimore with a degree in English 17 years ago, selling insurance is the only regular job Clancy has had, and he is not going to quit now. "I have 1,000 clients, I can't walk away from them. I have responsi-Yes, those matters are not to be taken lightly. You can't just let people like this fend for themselves. There was the time one of Clancy's policyholders, following the directions of a parking attendant, backed his car right over the attendant's foot, crunching several bones. "T've had some real beauties," Clancy said, talking in his home recently over the clamor of his son, Tommy, 3, and the buildozer that was digging the swimming pool just outside the window. Clancy lives there with his wife, Wanda, and four children ranging in age from 9 months to 13 years. While not many other smalltown insurance salesmen have a $39,000 Mercedes-80 they just bought "on sale," the difference between Clancy and other policy purveyors is contained in a small,

Author Tom Clancy Rising

An Insurance Salesman's Thrillers Are the Talk of the Pentagon

That is the room where a 39-yearold man whose career has been marriage can put on his thick glasses and forget that bad eyeight robbed him of his dream of a military career. That is the room where Clancy reads and writes.

Three walls are lined with thousands of books he arranges alphabetically and scales with a ladder. National Geographics are heaped in a corner, on the floor. "Charles and Diana" join "Wired," a set of encyclopedias, "The World's Missile Systems" and George Burns' "How to Live to Be 100" in a mixed population among the shelves.

"I like being around books. It makes me feel civilized," Clancy said in his library. "The only way to do all the things you'd like to do is to read."

Tucked in a small corner of the library is a personal computer, attached to a laser printer. That is where he sits, flipping cigarette ashes into a shell casing from an M-1 tank, and performs magic. Or at least something close to it, to hear the military people tell it.
"The technical detail is superb," said Secretary of Defense

Caspar W. Weinberger, who not only knows something about military matters but also has reviewed books on an occasional basis. "There are lots of spy novels and novels involving military technology," said Weinberger, who once panned Robert Lud-lum's popular "Bourne Identity."

"but I don't call to mind many, if any" that would compare to Clancy's "Hunt for Red October." "based on accuracy, ability to communicate, narrative skills and plot. It's hard to stop reading this book."

President Ronald Reagan invit-ed Claucy to the White House after reading it. The main fascination with Clancy's work has centered around how anyone outside the inner loop of the Pentagon could know so much about the most complex military technology and strategy. "The furiny thing is, I made up stuff that turned out to be real," Clancy said. "There are mistakes in my books. But I don't know what they are."

"I made up stuff that turned out to be real."

Weinberger said that in the considerable talk he heard at the Pentagon about Clancy's first book and his knowledge of weaponry, "I'm told there were only one or two minor errors, which is quite remarkable."

Even more remarkable than that is the source of much of Clancy's detail of submarines, fighter planes, tanks, satellites and the like. Many Washington readers have been discussing whether Clancy might have gotten hold of some classified information. That is a matter of some amusement to Clancy, who eaned most of his technical information for the first book from a war game called Harpoon.

After Clancy invested $10 in the game Harpoon, he was so tak-en with it that he got in touch with the pame's creator, the naval analyst Larry Bond, and arranged to meet him at a war games convention in Baltimore. The two became such good friends that Bond. became the godfather of one of Clancy's children.

Bond and Clancy collaborated on "Red Storm Rising," and Clancy said that he expected each of them to make $1 million on it, implying an even split of labor and profits. Bond's name does not appear as a co-author of "Red Storm Rising," a matter of some apparent tension that Clancy declined to discuss. Clancy does acknowledge Bond's contribution in the author's note in the book.

"I have never, ever been exposed to classified information." Clancy said. "And if I were, not for a moment would I consider using it. I'm in the business to have fun and make money. And f have a very old-fashioned view that anyone who divulges classified information ought to be Despite his hard-line view of those who give away military se-crets, Clancy does take a measure of delight in the trick he has pulled: exposing high-level mili-tary strategy as something an insurance salesman playing a war game could throw together in his

"Their principal worry," Clancy said of the Pentagon, "is that I already know enough things to figure out things they don't want me to figure out."

Asked if his books romanticize war, Clancy bristled. "Anybody who romanticizes war should be institutionalized. That's the greatest pornography of all. I'm a storyteller, examining an issue no one has examined yet."

Asked his feelings about violence, Clancy again looked annoyed. "A day doesn't go by that I don't think about blowing somebody away," he said sarcastically. Violence is sometimes necessary to preserve society. You can't prevent violence by ignoring it. That invites more. It's an unfortunate fact of life."

Those who would just lump all this war stuff into a category labeled "violence" miss the point, Clancy indicated.

"You're equating good guys and bad guys. That's like equating pharmacists and drug pushers. "I happen to believe we're the good guys and the Marxists-Le-ninists are the bad givs. They're evil. The president was right. Anyone who doubts it ought to read Solzhenitsyn." Growing up in Baltimore the son of a mailman and a department store employee, Clancy de-voured books on military history and yearned to become a soldier. But his poor eyesight caused him to flunk his physical for third-year Reserve Officer Training Corps in college.

Although Clancy was an English major and had wanted to write a novel since he was in high school, he went into the insurance business after college. "I was get-ting married. Marriage was my career plan. I took the first available job. The insurance business."

More than a decade later, Clancy finally found the time to write his novel and did "The Hunt for Red October" in six months. "just for fun," he said. The book was published by the Naval Institute Press, which had not handled a novel since its founding in 1902. No one expected much to come out of "Hunt," Clancy was "thun-derstruck, dumbfounded," by its

That success led a major publisher, Putnam, according to Clancy, to sign a minimum-$1million deal for the new book, a turn of events he finds "just plain crazy. It's not real."

In 1944, Gardner was a clerk and assembly worker at the Lockheeded plant in Burbank, where the P-63 Lightning fighter plant is the plant in Burbank. Lightning fighter planes flown by the squadron were built. She was named Lightning Lady and became the swinds of t the squadron's pimp after its mem-bers chose her photo from among pictures of 38 women. "I think every one of them will want to see her," said Major Richard Willsle, the unit commander. "If you've never seen a pinup in flesh and blood, you do want to see her everitually, I think."

A judge dismissed a suit against Ozzy Oshoume by saying. Trash can be given First Amendment protection, too." The suit was filed by a distranght father, Jack McCollum of Indio, California, who said his son, John, 19, committed suicide after listening to Osbourne's heavymetal rock music for five hours.

McCollum contended that a "saw tamic" influence in the lyrics of such songs as "Suicide Solution" and "Paranoid" pushed his son over the brink, but Superior Court Judge John Cole ruled that it could not be proven. He said the music may be totally objectionable and repulsive" to many but it is still a constitutionally protected form of free speech.
